I am often asked when I first knew I was an artist. The truth is that I have never known another way to live. As a child I made art with materials that I found around me. Scraps of fabric, wood and pinecones become magical sculptures. After exploring multiple artistic disciplines, it was only when I found clay that I was able to speak my truth about who I am as an artist.

During my years as an art teacher, I explored the history of clay as an art form. How early man came to work with clay and discover a firing process was fascinating to me. I believe clay vessels made by ancient people are as beautiful and elegant as any made today.

Bev was born in North Carolina and came to Oregon as a young adult. She received her BFA in Fine Art from PSU. Upon retiring from teaching, Bev moved to the Oregon coast. You can find more examples of Bev's work and learn about upcoming events on her website, CordovaClayWorks.com
