In this three-part landscape painting workshop, participants of any experience level will explore drawing and reference photography methods to study and express familiar landscape views. Students will focus on sketching and composition to later create two landscape paintings in the studio using an opaque medium. The workshop will be split into three meetings and will consider capturing light as it falls on architectural and natural landscape subjects.

We will discuss sketching tricks and use a variety of study practices to create expressions of places with observational care and an emphasis on each student cultivating his or her unique artistic voice. We will use drawing on site and reference photography as a means of visual note taking and the instructor will later help us synthesize our field experiences in the studio.
